

There was a time when we had a "private line" that prevented others from readily obtaining our numbers. This afforded some privacy. That system disappeared. Then telemarketers resorted to dialing numbers in series. We got hit with everyone calling to the point that no one wanted to answer the phone. What worried me mostly was that the telemarketer addresses us on a first name/friendly basis. This is confusing and misleading to the elderly and to children. It has been a God send not having telemarketers disturb our dinner or interrupt a long distance call afterall, my telephone is NOT FREE. Let these companies market products in a nonevasive way like the US MAIL that they PAY FOR!

Please leave the law alone.
Jacqueline Kruger